

FORCE OF ELECTRICITY.

A visit to the electric light works will demonstrate to the visitor the enormous power of electricity. The monster enterprises that have reached the pinnacle of success through this agency, are brought into public life daily.

Electricity will, within the next fifty years, be the only motive power employed by man to take the place of the engines of the present day.

In London the most able electricians are now engaged in completing the largest electric light plant in the world. It has been found necessary to erect a special factory in which to make the machinery, and the plant will furnish light for the entire city.

All the wire will be underground, and enough will be used to go around the world several times.

Since Ben Franklin proved that electricity was a force and identical with lightning, it has been the subject of much study with scientists.

With Thomas Edison so deeply set on controlling it to meet his demands, and the best electricians on the face of the earth bent on accomplishing more with this strange power than any other, it is bound to be the coming power of the world.

Already steam engines are becoming obsolete and electricity is fast taking their place.

Our lights, fuel and medicine, in a great measure, even now spring directly from the work of the electricians who will soon control the earth, and gas, water and all the other forces, will be but small factors in comparison to the force which they make a study.

Thomas Edison is now working on a noncombustible carbon which will never have to be supplanted with fresh material as the carbons of today.

The man who is fortunate enough to discover a material that will stand the current without loss will be a millionaire the day he makes the discovery.

The inventor of the carbons now used secures a royalty of one cent on each carbon, which allows him to live in opulence.

A NEW EXCUSE.

Now that the jury list has been increased from 3000 to 5000 the demand for valid excuses will necessarily be greater. The inventor of a new excuse for avoiding service upon a jury is the man whom the merchants and storekeepers of San Francisco are anxious to do honor to. We present the gentleman to their admiration and respect. His name is Joseph B. Gross of 82 Lexington avenue, N. Y., and the other day, when he was asked what his excuse was he said he was engaged in the policy business. The Judge said he had a right to excuse a person who was not of good moral character, and asked Mr. Gross:

"Do you not consider yourself a person of good enough moral character to serve as a juror?"

"No, sir."

"Are you willing to swear to that?" the judge asked.

"I am," Gross answered. He was sworn and repeated his statement, and the Court excused him!

Now all our jurors have to do is to swear that they are not of good moral character and in some cases they will not perjure themselves.—S. F. Report.

Our Democratic free-trade contemporaries do not seem to regard Mr. Gladstone as a desirable ally; at least they are not very pronounced in their admiration of the ex-Premier's idea that America should devote herself to growing cheap cereals and cheap cotton for England.

The following from Bacon's "Love's Labor Lost," act 5 scene 1, is understood to contain the longest word in the English language: "The hair of your head is not as long as honorificabilitudinitatibus." Can anyone explain its meaning?
